“A Bomb Paeonia Roots Friendship”

A Bomb Paeonia Roots Friendships

"From the earth we came; to the earth we return. In between we garden."<sup>1</sup> Luckily, because I belong to a garden club, I never garden alone. Whenever I fall in love with a plant, I reach out to my gardening friends to ask if they grow it and would they share a start? One such plant was the Paeonia 'Red Charm' that I first saw in a Denver garden. I love peonies. They are low maintenance, deer and slug-resistant, survive benign neglect, don't need constant division, and can live for decades in the one spot. Botrytis blight is controlled with pruning. I grow peonies—the pink, delicately fragrant 'Sarah Bernhardt', the nun-like white 'Duchess de Nemours'—but I had never seen a merlot-red peony so huge it made my eyes pop. Its seductive color left me drunk with craving. I coveted its sturdy stem, its lush foliage, the perfect 9-inch roundness of its flowers. I wanted its explosion of ruffled, petaloid petals surrounded by a ring of larger guard petals, so tightly packed it was no wonder it was classified as a "bomb peony." The flower's elusive scent of cloves instantly wafted me back to India, my birth country. I had to have it.

This peony, I learned, was a hybrid created by crossing a Paeonia lactiflora and a Paeonia officinalis. Introduced in 1944 by Illinois grower Lyman Glasscock, it won the American Peony Society's gold medal award in 1956. I asked my gardening friends: Could they help me find a start as I'd had no success at the nurseries? My British-born friend Audrey Plummer, a lover of fuchsias, stepped up. She spread the word. Dutch-born friend Carolina Wagemans, who grew dahlias and even had one named in her honor, brought in a start for me. Following instructions, I planted the tuber in full sun, in well-draining soil, avoided planting it too deep to encourage it to flower, and gave its promise of huge flowers some structural support.

After a couple of years of impatient waiting, I saw the first buds, with ants slurping their sweet sap. When the flowers opened, way earlier than the other peonies in my garden, I called Audrey and Carolina, thanked them and sent them photos of the first bloom. I took one flower to my house-bound neighbor. It almost toppled over her bud vase! I took another to the assisted living center which my garden club supports. I was immediately surrounded by residents, who said, like I had, that they had never seen a peony so red and so full.

Sadly, both friends have since passed away, becoming one with the earth they loved so well. I mourn them still, but I also remember how three first-generation immigrants obliterated national borders by sharing a bomb peony hybridized in America. The wine-red flowers are a toast to our shared love of gardening. The plant they gifted me is thriving, so I know that friendship and memories, like peonies, endure.

SCHOLARSHIPS

Jeanette Pruin Chairman

WSFGC members contributed to seven annual scholarships. Each student receives $2,000. Students are selected by their department chairman.

WASHINGTON STATE UNIVERSITY

Angel Cantu will be a senior majoring in Landscape, Nursery & Greenhouse Management. She chose to pursue this degree because of her interest in understanding plant care and landscape design. Her career goal is to work in a field related to her degree, where she can gain hands-on experience and continue expanding her knowledge.

Vianey Leveron is a third-year student studying Landscape Architecture. She is pursuing this degree because of her deep appreciation for nature and the endless possibilities within the built environment, to enhance experiences for people, wildlife and plant life. She hopes to join a firm that contributes to meaningful, community centered design.

Cameron March is a senior studying Integrated Plant Science with a major in Agricultural Biotechnology. He plans to work in the horticultural industry to gain hands on experience from professionals in the field. In addition, he will be establishing his first orchard consisting of 200 trees representing nearly 100 cultivars of diverse tree fruit.

UNIVERSITY OF WASHINGTON

Elias Diaz Gomez is a junior studying Biology with a concentration in Physiology. Since starting his major in Biology, he has found a deep fascination in the biological sciences and the profound impact it has on humans and the environment, via genetics, evolution, and natural processes.

Cheyenne Rankell is pursuing a degree in Environmental Science and Terrestrial Resource Management. She has been involved in fieldwork opportunities in resource assessment, restoration, forestry, soil ecology and plant identification. Her goals following graduation include landing a professional position in a field she is passionate about, whether that be restoration, conservation or assessment.

Sloane Palmer is a Master of Landscape Architecture student. She has a background in environmental restoration and horticulture. She developed a love of plants from working hands-on in gardens and public green spaces. She is passionate about thoughtful planting design and connecting communities to the ecosystems they live in.

WESTERN WASHINGTON UNIVERSITY

Oscar Hastings is an undergraduate student pursuing a BS in Environmental Science with an emphasis in Freshwater & Terrestrial Ecology with a minor in Biology. He intends to pursue an MS and a career in lab science, where he hopes to further conservation goals and promote access and equity within the field of environmental science.

NGC VIOLET NEVITT GOSE SCHOLARSHIP AWARD $4000 Scholarship

Kelley Govan is returning to school as an adult, learning to pivot careers, returning to what she loves: working with plants. Earlier this year she decided to follow her passion and enroll in an environmental horticulture program. This is the first time she has studied primarily ornamental plants, and she is enjoying it immensely. She is extremely passionate about creating regenerative, resilient, and beneficial landscapes that mix native, ornamental yet ecologically functional, and food plants. She is excited about the opportunities this program has already provided for her and looks forward to where it may lead her.
